Keep Calm is a family of fonts developed from the now famous World War 2 poster that was designed in 1939 but never issued, then rediscovered in 2000. When I first saw the Keep Calm and Carry On poster, I wrongly assumed the letters to be Gill Sans. Although that influence is apparent, in the R particularly, the lettering was clearly hand-drawn by a talented designer who, if the M's perfectly pointed vertex is anything to go by, was equally steeped in the signage of the London Underground. The most anomalous character, the C, resembles that found in the Gotham typeface, and given that Gotham's vernacular sources included the handmade, 'basic lettering' of engineers, perhaps that shouldn't be surprising.

Developing the Keep Calm typeface is an exercise in extrapolation; an intriguing challenge to build a whole, high quality font family based on the twelve available uppercase letters of the Keep Calm poster, and on similar lettering from the other two posters in the original series. This has required the creation of complementary lowercases that are believably 1939; that maintain the influence of Gill and Johnston while also hinting at the functional imperative of a wartime drawing office. The draughtsman was balancing intuitive, human qualities, and the pure pleasure of drawing elegant contemporary letters, against an underlying geometry of ruled lines, perfect circles, 45° terminals, and a requirement for no-nonsense clarity.

The lowercase g follows the Gill/Johnston eyeglass model, but I've also included an alternative, single-story g at the Alt-G keystroke (Alt-0169 on Windows) normally used for the copyright symbol, which has been relocated elsewhere in the font.

An alternative lowercase t, without the curved wedge cutaway, is provided at the Alt-T (dagger) keystroke (Alt-0134 on Windows).

The crown motif from the top of the Keep Calm poster is contained within the original medium weight font at the ^ keystroke (shift 6). The crown is also at the ± (plus minus) and § (section) keystrokes on all weights.

K-TYPE LICENCE AGREEMENT

FREE FONTS
K-Type Free Fonts are provided free for personal use and do not require a licence. However, free fonts used for business or promotional purposes, or as webfonts, need to be licensed by purchasing the appropriate Commercial Licence or Enterprise Licence available from k-type.com

COMMERCIAL LICENCE (Normal Licence)
A Commercial Licence grants you non-exclusive rights to use the font for normal graphic design purposes in print and on screen. The font may be stored on up to five workstations and output devices belonging to you; multiple licences can be purchased where more seats are required. You cannot legally give the font to others or install it on their machines (with the exception of co-workers, your designer and your service bureau). You can embed the font securely in non-editable documents.

A Commercial Licence permits @font-face use without any pageview limitations. Basic form field inputs are permitted, for example a search box or contact form, but providing remote users with the ability to edit, personalise and dynamically generate design using webfonts is not allowed. To incorporate a K-Type font file within your software product or your website to create user-generated graphics 'on the fly', or for use on an unlimited number of workstations, a more comprehensive Enterprise Licence should be purchased from k-type.com

ENTERPRISE LICENCE (Extended Licence)
An Enterprise Licence is required where a font will be incorporated within software products such as apps, games, ebooks or computer programs intended for resale, redistribution or promotional purposes. An Enterprise Licence covers one or more of your applications.

An Enterprise Licence permits @font-face use without any pageview limitations, and also allows you to give remote users the ability to edit text and dynamically generate design using webfonts.

An Enterprise Licence permits the font to be stored on an unlimited number of workstations and output devices belonging to you, and grants non-exclusive rights to use the font for normal graphic design purposes in print and on screen. An Enterprise Licence is not transferable to others.Fonts are supplied "as is". Every effort is made to ensure that the files will behave properly, and whilst mistakes and omissions are corrected cheerfully and quickly, K-Type will not be liable for losses incurred by software failure.
